I know there are quite strict rules about putting up billboards on State Highways, usually restricted to the immediate vicinity of the business being advertised. I understand this is to avoid driver distraction and having the countryside strewn with promotional material. I can understand this and have in the past been constrained (rightly) by these restrictions.

I now see large "Stop Three Waters" billboards appearing all over the Wairarapa (and probably elsewhere). They are on both SH2 and SH 53 (where photo was taken).

These would seem to be clearly non-compliant as well as being overtly political. Is this acceptable?

Grateful for your views
