

“ Introduction

Your AMP needs to make it clear that your organisation is generally following good, robust processes for activity management. This is particularly important in your evaluation of alternatives and options, and the selection of a preferred programme.

1.6 Activity Management Process

The first step of the activity management process is about understanding and defining the services that the activity should deliver, the demands placed on the activity, and the risks involved with delivery of the activity. This is outlined in Sections 2 to 4.

The second part of the process outlines the roading assets which are required to deliver the activity, addresses any gaps between what is required and what is currently provided and identifies the most effective lifecycle strategies to manage these assets and the financial investment required. This is outlined in Sections 5 to 7.

The final part of the process is identifying opportunities for ongoing improvement. This is summarised in Section 8.
