

New residents and visitors

Driving in New Zealand

Valid overseas licence

To use your overseas driver licence to drive in New Zealand:

- your licence must be current (not expired)
- your licence must not be disqualified or revoked in the country of issue
- you must not have been disqualified in the country the licence was issued in
- you must not have been suspended or disqualified in New Zealand
- you must not have got a New Zealand driver licence since you last entered New Zealand
- you must have arrived in New Zealand within the last:
 - » 18 months for an overseas car licence, or
 - » 12 months for an overseas motorcycle or truck licence.

If you or your licence don't meet these requirements, you can't use that licence to drive in New Zealand.

Acceptable translation

If your overseas licence or driver permit isn't in English, you must also carry an accurate English translation issued by:

- a translation service approved by NZ Transport Agency Waka Kotahi (go to www.nzta.govt.nz/translators for a list)
- a diplomatic representative at a high commission, embassy or consulate, or
- the authority that issued your overseas licence.

These documents may also be acceptable as a translation:

- an international driving permit (IDP) - issued in accordance with a United Nations Convention on road traffic
- a translation document issued by a Notary Public Office in China.

International driving permit (IDP)

You can't drive in New Zealand or convert to a New Zealand licence if you only have an IDP on its own. You must have a current and valid overseas driver licence if you wish to drive in New Zealand. If you want to convert to a New Zealand licence, your overseas licence must be current or have expired within the last 12 months.

If you don't get a New Zealand licence

If you've been in New Zealand for more than 18 months and haven't converted to a New Zealand licence you must not drive. You could be charged by the police if you're caught driving and your insurance claims may be declined.

Driving to earn money

If you want to earn a living from driving you'll probably have to convert your overseas licence to a New Zealand licence first, and you may also need to get a driver licence endorsement.

You'll definitely need to do so if you want to transport the public or carry dangerous goods. For example, before you can earn money carrying passengers, driving a tow truck or work as a driving instructor or testing officer, you must apply for an endorsement and be cleared by a police check in New Zealand.

Go to www.nzta.govt.nz/driver-licences/getting-an-endorsement to find out more about endorsements.

Suspended or disqualified in New Zealand

If you're using an overseas driver licence to drive in New Zealand and you're then disqualified or suspended, you can no longer use your overseas licence to drive in New Zealand. If you want to drive in New Zealand after your disqualification or suspension has ended, you'll need to get a New Zealand driver licence.

Overseas alcohol interlock licence

If you have an overseas alcohol interlock licence and wish to drive in New Zealand, we recommend that you apply for a New Zealand licence through the graduated licensing system.

Go to www.nzta.govt.nz/driver-licences to find out how to get a New Zealand licence.

Carry your licence while driving

In New Zealand you must have your overseas licence with you at all times when you're driving. If your overseas driver licence isn't in English, you must carry an acceptable English translation (see page 1).

New Zealand road rules

If you're caught violating any of the New Zealand road rules, the police could take action against you. This could include:

- Roadside licence suspension. This means the police immediately seize and suspend a driver's licence at the roadside. In addition to any other charges, the driver is banned from driving for 28 days. This can happen if you:
 - are caught driving at more than one-and-a-half times the legal alcohol limit
 - refuse to supply a blood sample to be tested to excess blood alcohol

- are caught driving at more than 40km/h above a permanent speed limit (other than by speed cameras)
- are caught for a drink drive offence and you've had a previous drink drive conviction in the last four years.
- Roadside vehicle impoundment. This means the police can seize and impound a vehicle for 28 days. You have to pay a fee before the vehicle can be released. This can happen if you:
 - race other drivers or perform any other street-racer stunts (wheelies, unnecessary displays of speed etc)
 - are caught for a drink drive offence where you have two or more previous drink drive convictions in the last four years
 - drive while disqualified
 - drive while your licence is suspended or revoked
 - are caught driving after being forbidden to drive by police, and before getting a current licence (eg you're unlicensed, your licence has expired, or you need to reinstate your licence and the police have stopped you and forbidden you to drive).

For more information about actions the police could take go to www.nzta.govt.nz/driver-licences/driving-offences-and-penalties or read Driving offences and penalties (Factsheet 55).

More information for visitors to New Zealand

Read our brochure Driving in New Zealand. This gives you brief advice on aspects of driving in New Zealand that you may be unfamiliar with. It's written in English and has sections translated into Spanish, Portuguese, French, German, Samoan, Tongan, Tagalog, simplified and traditional Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Thai and Arabic.

Go to www.nzta.govt.nz/driving-in-nz to download a copy.

Drivers who are new to our roads, people learning to drive and people wanting to get a new licence class must make use of the appropriate version of The official New Zealand road code. There are different versions for cars, motorcycles and heavy vehicles (trucks). The road code contains information you need to know to get a driver licence. It also has lots of information to help drivers be safe and courteous on the road.

You can read the road code online at www.nzta.govt.nz/roadcode or get a copy from bookstores, driver licensing agents and some public libraries.

This factsheet is a general guide only. It doesn't replace legal advice, and your exact requirements will depend on current legislation.

Make sure you have the most up-to-date version of this factsheet by checking www.nzta.govt.nz/factsheets

www.nzta.govt.nz

0800 822 422

NZ Transport Agency Waka Kotahi,
Private Bag 11777, Palmerston North 4442